The Companion

- Kayta was her name. She was nine.
I'd no idea what I could do about her,
but doubt quickly dissolved to certainty:
I'd have to take this thing under my wing;
5 girls were in some sense of the word human,
a human being couldn't just be left.
The droning in the air and the explosions receded farther into the distance,
I touched the little girl on her elbow.
10 "Come on. Do you hear? What are you waiting for?"
The world was big and we were not big, and it was tough for us to walk across it. She had galoshes on and felt boots,
I had a pair of secondhand boots.
15 We forded streams and tramped across the forest;
each of my feet at every step it took taking a smaller step inside the boot.
The child was feeble, I was certain of it.
"Boohoo", she'd say. "I'm tired", she'd say.
20 She'd tire in no time I was certain of it,
But as things turned out it was me who tired.
I growled I wasn't going any further and sat down suddenly beside the fence.
"What's the matter with you?" she said.
25 "Don't be so stupid! Put grass in your boots.
Do you want to eat something? Why don't you talk?
Hold this tin, this is crab.
We'll have refreshments. You small boys, you're always pretending to be brave."
30 Then out I went across the prickly stubble marching beside her in a few minutes.
Masculine pride was muttering in my mind:
I scraped together strength and I held out for fear of what she'd say. I even whistled.
35 Grass was sticking out from my tattered boots.
So on and on
we walked without thinking of rest passing craters, passing fire, under the rocking sky of "41" *
40 tottering crazy on its smoking columns.

Yevgeny Yevtushenko

*A reference to World War II which lasted from 1939-1945

items 34 - 43

Directions: Read the following extract carefully and then answer items 34 - 43 on the basis of what is stated or implied.

Kino and Juana came to the place where the brush houses stopped and the city of stone and plaster began, the city of harsh outer walls and inner cool gardens where a little water played and the bougainvillea crusted the walls with purple and brick-red and white. They heard from the secret gardens the singing of caged birds and heard the splash of cooling water on hot flagstones. The procession 5 crossed the blinding plaza and passed in front of the church. It had grown now, and in the outskirts the hurrying newcomers were being softly informed how the baby had been stung by a scorpion, how the father and mother were taking it to the doctor.

And the newcomers, particularly the beggars from the front of the church who were great experts in financial analysis, looked quickly at Juana's old blue skirt, saw the tears in her shawl, appraised 10 the green ribbon on her braids, read the age of Kino's blanket and the thousand washings of his clothes, and set them down as poverty people and went along to see what kind of drama might develop. The four beggars in front of the church knew everything in the town. They were students of the expressions of young women as they went in to confession, and they saw them as they came out and read the nature of the sin. They knew every little scandal and some very big crimes. They slept at their posts in the 15 shadow of the church so that no one crept in for consolation without their knowledge. And they knew the doctor. They knew his ignorance, his cruelty, his avarice, his appetites, his sins. They knew his clumsy abortions and the little brown pennies he gave sparingly for alms.

They had seen his corpses go into the church. And, since early Mass was over and business was slow, they followed the procession, these endless searchers after perfect knowledge of their 20 fellowmen, to see what the fat, lazy doctor would do about an indigent baby with a scorpion bite.

The scurrying procession came at last to the big gate in the wall of the doctor's house. They could hear the splashing of the water and the singing of caged birds and the sweep of the long brooms on the flagstones. And they could smell the frying of good bacon from the doctor's house.

Kino hesitated a moment. This doctor was not of his people. This doctor was of a race which 25 for nearly four hundred years had beaten and starved and robbed and despised Kino's race, and frightened it too, so that the indigent came humbly to the door. And as always when he came near to one of this race, Kino felt weak and afraid and angry at the same time. Rage and terror went together. He could kill the doctor more easily than he could talk to him, for all of the doctor's race spoke to all of Kino's race as though they were simple animals. And as Kino raised his right hand to the iron ring knocker in the 30 gate, rage swelled in him, and the pounding music of the enemy beat in his ears, and his lips drew tight against his teeth but with his left hand he reached to take off his hat. The iron ring pounded against the gate. Kino took off his hat and stood waiting. Coyotito moaned a little in Juana's arms, and she spoke softly to him. The procession crowded close the better to see and hear.

- ☒ (A) The kindness of the beggars
 - ☒ (B) The curiosity of the city people
 - ☒ (C) The suffering of Juana and Kino
 - ☒ (D) The contrast between the rich and the poor

Items 44 - 53

Directions: Read the following passage carefully and then answer items 44 - 53 on the basis of what is stated or implied.

5 The joy of being near her increased with each step. And at last it reached such a point that, as he looked into her eyes and noted the flush of glad and frightened agitation that suffused her face, he was confused himself, and in silence gave her a smile that said too much.

10 "If this is the case", he said to himself, "I ought to think it over and make up my mind, and not let myself be carried away like a boy by the impulse of the moment."

15 "The only thing I can find against it is that when I lost Marie I vowed to myself I would remain true to her memory. That is the only thing I can say against my feeling -- it's an important factor", he said to himself. He was aware nevertheless that this consideration had not the slightest importance for him personally, except that it might detract from the romantic role he played in the eyes of others.

25 Of all the women and girls of his acquaintance he could not think of a single one who united in herself to such a degree all, literally all, the qualities which, considering the matter in cold blood, he would wish to see in his wife. She had all the charm and freshness of youth but she was not a child, and she loved him consciously as a woman ought to love. That was one point. Another point she was not only far from being worldly -- she had an unmistakable distaste for worldly society, and at the same time she knew the world and had all the ways of a woman of 35 the best society, the absence of which in a life companion would be unthinkable for him. Thirdly, she was religious, and not unwittingly religious and good like a child -- like Kitty for example -- but her life was based on religious 40 principles. Even down to small details Koznyshev found in her all that he desired in a wife: she was poor and without family; so

45 she would not bring into her husband's house a mass of relations with their influence, as he saw Kitty doing. She would be indebted to her husband for everything, which, too, was what he had always desired for his future married life. And this girl, who combined all these qualities, loved him. He was a modest man, but he could not help seeing it. And he loved her.

55 The one argument against it was his age. But he came of long-lived stock, he had not a single grey hair in his head, and nobody would have taken him for forty. He remembered Varenka's saying that it was only in Russia that men regarded themselves as old at fifty, and that in France a man of fifty considers himself dans la force de l'age -- in the prime of life -- while a man of forty is 60 un jeune homme. And what did the mere reckoning of years matter when he felt as young at heart as he had been twenty years ago? Was it not youth to feel as he felt now, 65 as he saw the graceful figure of Varenka in her yellow dress with her basket on her arm, stepping lightly past the trunk of an old birch tree? His heart contracted with happiness, and melted within him. He felt that he had 70 made up his mind. Varenka, who had just crouched down to pick a mushroom, rose buoyantly and looked round. Throwing away his cigar, Koznyshev advanced towards her with a determined step.

44. Koznyshev decided "to think it over" (line 9) because he wanted

- (A) to make quite sure that he was not being untrue to Marie's memory
- (B) a chance to compare Kitty to Varenka to determine whom he really loved
- (C) an opportunity to observe Varenka's actions more closely
- (D) to be sure that he wasn't allowing himself to be influenced by emotion

45. In lines 12 – 15 of the extract, Koznyshev is revealed as a person who is
- ☒ (A) faithful
 - (B) passionate
 - (C) conceited
 - (D) level-headed
46. When Koznyshev says, "... I vowed to myself I would remain true to her memory" (lines 13 – 14), he means that he would never
- ☒ (A) forget Marie
 - (B) love anyone else but Marie
 - (C) marry a second time
 - (D) tell an untruth about Marie 47. Koznyshev's view of Kitty (who is mentioned in lines 38 and 45) is that she is
- (A) young and irreligious
 - (B) naive and dependent
 - (C) unthinking and unattractive
 - ☒ (D) childish and insensitive
48. Koznyshev would like to see all of the following in his future wife EXCEPT
- (A) maturity
 - (B) indebtedness
 - ☒ (C) worldliness
 - (D) love for him
49. Which of the following, in Koznyshev's eyes, was an admirable quality which Varenka possessed?
- (A) Naiveté
 - (B) Childlikeness
 - (C) Friendliness
 - ☒ (D) Refinement
50. Koznyshev uses Varenka's saying about men in Russia and in France (lines 55 – 61) to support his own view that
- (A) she was indeed knowledgeable about matters of the world
 - ☒ (B) age was really a matter of opinion
 - (C) forty was the right age at which to marry
 - (D) being a Russian he was too old for Varenka 51. Koznyshev's major consideration acting against his marrying Varenka was that he
- ☒ (A) thought he was too old for Varenka
 - (B) thought his emotions were adversely affecting his reasoning ability
 - (C) would lose the romantic image he enjoyed in the eyes of others
 - (D) wanted to remain true to Marie's memory
52. "Throwing away his cigar, Koznyshev advanced towards her with a determined step." (lines 72 – 74). What does this suggest he has decided to do?
- (A) To tell Varenka how young he felt
 - (B) To compliment Varenka on her pretty dress
 - (C) To escort Varenka home
 - ☒ (D) To ask Varenka to marry him
53. Within the last paragraph, the nature of Koznyshev's considerations changes as he thinks about marrying Varenka. Which of the following BEST describes this change?
- ☒ (A) From rational to emotional
 - (B) From impersonal to personal
 - (C) From practical to idealistic
 - (D) From particular to general

Accounting

Nights too warm for TV
we're flung outdoors to the porch, citronella candles scenting the space between us, our faces aglow

with coin banks, an abacus, five and ten dollar rolling paper,
our tidy ledger.

10 I count, line the coins in neat rows,
the abacus clicking out our worth,
how much can we save, stack up against the seasons—winter coming.
her tightly braided hair turning white;
15 her hands quick, filling the paper casings
like homemade sausage.

There's money in the bank downtown,
but this we'll keep at home
buried in jars beneath the house, the crawlspace filling up, packed solid 20 as any foundation.
