The factors contributing to the decline in the fish population in Duboth

Duboth is a small community. It is located on the western side of the Pecan Harbour and on the eastern side of the Pecan wetlands. In 2010, 80% of the male population in Duboth between the ages of 18 and 70 depended on fishing for a living. Reports have indicated that the fish population in Duboth has declined significantly. A survey was conducted to determine the factors contributing to the decline in the fish population. One thousand, two hundred fishermen between the ages of 18 and 70 were interviewed to ascertain their views on the issue. The survey revealed that 600 of the fishermen believed that the decline in the fish population was because of the destruction of the mangroves. One hundred and eighty fishermen believed that the use of dynamite as a fishing method destroyed the fish population, 300 believed that pollution of the harbour led to the depletion of the fish population and 120 stated that overfishing caused the depletion. The findings were documented and presented to the community for discussion on the findings, implications, recommendations and also proposals for solution.
